

Relational Scan

Yes, your objective was to drain the swamp but when you are up to your neck in alligators, which one do you tackle first?

Life is rarely quiet. There is plenty to do. Lots of things and people are screaming for your attention. Even when everyone around you is telling you that things are fine, there is a nagging feeling that some crucial situation is not getting your attention.

This may be an indication that the organisation needs to increase the capability and capacity of its many relationships. Our relational scanning (rScan) service is a means by which to quickly and clearly identify where relationships are strong and weak. The scan itself can be informative to the participants but more importantly, the patterns of strength and weakness give insight and help answer crucial questions around where to prioritise action.

Our rScan service is designed to:

- 👤 Identify where there are situations that need addressing
- 👤 Inform what sort of attention these situations might need

You may need the rScan service if:

- 👤 Your organisation is working at full capacity and still not delivering what it needs
- 👤 Your organisation needs to improve its performance consistently over time
- 👤 There are numerous issues clamouring for attention

Our standard process:

- STEP 1 We work with you to identify the potentially relevant parties. These may be direct or indirect stakeholders that influence your outcomes.
- STEP 2 We survey all relevant parties' relationships and analyse the patterns of strength and weakness.
- STEP 3 We deliver a Relational Dashboard (rDashboard) with a commentary on the patterns.
- STEP 4 We run a focussed workshop to prioritise the relational issues and identify actions that can address them.
